1. Introduction to Research Ethics Application System

The Research Ethics Application System, embedded in the University's central student information portal e-Bridge, is designed to provide an online platform to facilitate and support XJTLU research ethics applications and reviews, with a view to streamlining the ethics application and review processes and improving the operational efficiency.

Research which involves human (including human participants, survey respondent, human genetic resources and personal data) or animals will always require formal ethical consideration.

The term 'human genetic resources' includes human genetic resource materials and human genetic resource information. The term 'human genetic resource materials' means a range of genetic materials that contain human genomes and genes, such as organs, tissues and cells. The term 'human genetic resource information' includes human gene and genome data, as well as other information and data generated utilizing human genetic resource materials. Clinical data (临床数据), image data (影像数据), protein data (蛋白质数据) and metabolic data (代谢数据) are not included in human genetic resource information.

If you are a registered student and your research require formal ethical consideration, please contact your supervisor to initiate the online ethics application. To determine if your research requires ethical clearance at XJTLU, you could contact your supervisor for consulting or ethics@xjtlu.edu.cn for additional guidance and support.

Please be aware that only the supervisor created the application and assigned you to complete the application form, you could able to access the Research Ethics Application and Review System.
